

*Project Type: Original IP. psychopunk tone and style guide for cross-media storytelling.
Focus: voice, atmosphere, imagery, and structural rhythm for surreal, metaphysical fiction.*

I developed a narrative tone bible for a psychopunk universe built around observers between worlds, unstable bodies, and distorted perception. The goal was to codify how language, rhythm, and imagery work together so different stories, POVs, and media can share one recognizable “psychopunk” voice.

My Role & Goals

Role: narrative stylist and tone director.

I defined the tonal rules of the setting and expressed them through sample scenes, voice guidelines, and recurring image systems.

Key goals:

- Turn abstract ideas (temporality, body-swap, observation, death-as-process) into concrete stylistic rules.
- Build a recognizable voice that mixes clinical observation with hallucinatory intimacy.
- Design recurring image clusters (laboratory, bodies, money, roads, deserts, blood, signals).
- Create a flexible guide that can support stories, game text, and atmospheric copy.

Key Tone & Style Systems

Core tonal principles

- Psychocosmic perspective: the narrator looks at humans as “RealityCoreUnits” inside a larger metaphysical system.
- Contrast of mundane and cosmic: salaries, buses, supermarkets, layered over death, law, and eternity.
- Calm cruelty: violence and breakdown described with precise, almost gentle language.

Voice & perspective

- First-person observer who can shift bodies but keeps one continuous consciousness.
- Lexicon blends scientific terms, invented metaphysics, and everyday slang.
- Interior commentary is analytical, not emotional; emotion leaks through imagery, not explanations.

Imagery & metaphors

- Repeated motifs: laboratories, protective domes, trash bags, meat, teeth, money, snow, carts, buses, deserts.
- Bodies described as objects, containers, or tools (“The Body”, “The Flesh”, “Sarcophagus”).
- Cities appear as layered systems: mechanisms, adverts, pipes, cables, and invisible laws.

Rhythm & structure

- Long, flowing sentences for trance and sensory overload; short cuts for shock and realization.
- Sections often titled as “Body 1 / Body 2 / Body 3” to emphasize Embodiment Cycles.
- Scenes move from close physical detail to wider metaphysical reflection to sharp concrete action.

Short Narrative Sample

We wake up inside someone else’s life long before they notice the substitution.

In the white laboratory light, two meanings twist together in a single dance, and from their collision a point of black density appears, so small it could be mistaken for dust, so heavy it bends the room around it. When the flare hits the mid-rotation screen, the technicians call it “a new anomaly”. I call it My Arrival. I slip into the junior researcher’s body as easily as into a glove. She eats, she jokes about her colleague’s ridiculous moustache, she signs reports she doesn’t understand. And while she laughs with the others over lukewarm tea, I quietly test her muscles, her memories, her fear of death, preparing this fragile shell for the work it was never meant to do.
